peared in the Revue des cours et conférences a series of studies on Renouvier; to say nothing of numerous articles printed in various other publications. At the time of his death he had just finished a book on Descartes savant, which is a most useful addition to our knowledge of that great philosopher: the work can be judged by the chapters that have already appeared, principally in this very Revue. Some days before his death he wrote to tell us of the approaching completion of a new chapter, which, in our opinion, should serve as an introduction to the book. He was awaiting his return to Paris to verify the notes."
